Several days ago he obtained security, and was released, and immediately went back to see Sallie with whom he had a quarrel; she giving him to understand that his company was not wanted; but after some parieting they made up, and they have been living together until Friday peaceably. On Friday meraing Brandaill got drunk, and going to the house commenced an attack on Sallie, ending by drawing a knife, with which the back and ran off. The nose was, however, put in its place by a surgeon, and it will probably yet do good service. Shepherd got a warrant for Williams, charging him with assault and battery and maybem, and the latter went before Justice Clayton, on hearing that the warrant was out, and gave security for a further hearing.

GEN. PHELPS AND THE CONTRABANDS .- A gen-tleman up town, who, the other day, missed his "boy," learned that the lad was at Carrollton. He at once repaired to the headquarters of Gen. Pheips and stated his case—that he was in search of a runaway negro. "You have lost a man, have you," observed the General, inquiringly and dry-ly. "Yes, sir," responded the other. "Very well;" said the General, "the negroes are over yonder; if your boy is there he can go with you if he wishes." The gentleman asked further, that a guide might bes-nt with him, as be did not know the road and patns. "Certainly," said the General—
"Orderly, call Maj. Scott." Presently the Major presented himself, and the General instructed him to conduct the gentleman to the negro camp, and assist him in anding his "boy," and to say to the "boy" that he had his (the General's) permission to return with his master.

He brought a note from the commander at Fort Ridgely, asking for reinforcements. He was then besteged by two thousand Indians, who were making attacks every hour, night and day. The garrison was exhausted and almost decimated when Fremer left, and all the wooden buildings about the fort were burning. Ex-Governor Sibley is marching to the relief of the garrison with 1,100 men, and would reach there on Sunday, but it was feared too late to save the garrison.
